

1. What is the difference between cooperation and competition?

- A. Cooperation is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal, while competition is when individuals vie against each other for resources.
- B. Competition is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal, while cooperation is when individuals vie against each other for resources.
- C. There is no difference between cooperation and competition.

2. Which of the following is an example of cooperation?

- A. A mother bird feeding her chicks
- B. A pride of lions hunting a gazelle
- C. A group of students studying for an exam together

3. Which of the following is an example of competition?

- A. A mother bird feeding her chicks
- B. A pride of lions hunting a gazelle
- C. A group of students studying for an exam together

4. Why do animals cooperate?

- A. To increase their chances of survival
- B. To increase their chances of reproduction
- C. To increase their chances of both survival and reproduction

5. Why do animals compete?

- A. To increase their chances of survival
- B. To increase their chances of reproduction
- C. To increase their chances of both survival and reproduction

6. How does cooperation benefit animals?

- A. By increasing their chances of survival
- B. By increasing their chances of reproduction
- C. By increasing their chances of both survival and reproduction

7. How does competition benefit animals?

- A. By increasing their chances of survival
- B. By increasing their chances of reproduction
- C. By increasing their chances of both survival and reproduction

8. What is the difference between altruism and selfishness?

- A. Altruism is when an individual helps another individual at a cost to themselves, while selfishness is when an individual only helps another individual if they will also benefit from it.
- B. Selfishness is when an individual helps another individual at a cost to themselves, while altruism is when an individual only helps another individual if they will also benefit from it.
- C. There is no difference between altruism and selfishness.

9. Which of the following is an example of altruism?

- A. A mother bird feeding her chicks
- B. A pride of lions hunting a gazelle

C. A group of students studying for an exam together

10. Which of the following is an example of selfishness?

- A. A mother bird feeding her chicks
- B. A pride of lions hunting a gazelle
- C. A group of students studying for an exam together

11. Why do animals engage in altruistic behavior?

- A. To increase their chances of survival
- B. To increase their chances of reproduction
- C. To increase their chances of both survival and reproduction

12. Why do animals engage in selfish behavior?

- A. To increase their chances of survival
- B. To increase their chances of reproduction
- C. To increase their chances of both survival and reproduction

13. How does altruism benefit animals?

- A. By increasing their chances of survival
- B. By increasing their chances of reproduction
- C. By increasing their chances of both survival and reproduction

14. How does selfishness benefit animals?

- A. By increasing their chances of survival
- B. By increasing their chances of reproduction
- C. By increasing their chances of both survival and reproduction

15. What is the difference between cooperation and altruism?

- A. Cooperation is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal, while altruism is when an individual helps another individual at a cost to themselves.
- B. Altruism is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal, while cooperation is when an individual helps another individual at a cost to themselves.
- C. There is no difference between cooperation and altruism.

16. What is the difference between competition and selfishness?

- A. Competition is when individuals vie against each other for resources, while selfishness is when an individual only helps another individual if they will also benefit from it.
- B. Selfishness is when individuals vie against each other for resources, while competition is when an individual only helps another individual if they will also benefit from it.
- C. There is no difference between competition and selfishness.

17. How does cooperation differ from both altruism and selfishness?

- A. Cooperation is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal, while altruism is when an individual helps another individual at a cost to themselves and selfishness is when an individual only helps another individual if they will also benefit from it.

B. Altruism is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal, while cooperation is when an individual helps another individual at a cost to themselves and selfishness is when an individual only helps another individual if they will also benefit from it.

C. There is no difference between cooperation, altruism, and selfishness.

18. How does competition differ from both altruism and selfishness?

A. Competition is when individuals vie against each other for resources, while altruism is when an individual helps another individual at a cost to themselves and selfishness is when an individual only helps another individual if they will also benefit from it.

B. Altruism is when individuals vie against each other for resources, while competition is when an individual helps another individual at a cost to themselves and selfishness is when an individual only helps another individual if they will also benefit from it.

C. There is no difference between competition, altruism, and selfishness.

19. Which of the following is true about cooperation?

A. Cooperation is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal.

B. Competition is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal.

C. There is no difference between cooperation and competition.

20. Which of the following is true about competition?

A. Competition is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal.

B. Cooperation is when two or more individuals work together to achieve a common goal.

C. There is no difference between cooperation and competition.

Answer Key: 1-A, 2-C, 3-B, 4-C, 5-C, 6-C, 7-C, 8-A, 9-A, 10-B, 11-C, 12-C, 13-C, 14-C, 15-A, 16-A, 17-A, 18-A, 19-A, 20-B